In 2005, the Washington State Arts Commission (WSAC) teamed up with WESTAF (Western States Arts Federation) and Seattle Office of Arts and Cultural Affairs to establish the Creative Vitality Index (CVI). The CVI tracks employment in the creative sector, and arts participation through specific, credible indicators. The CVI helps us understand the context of artistic and creative enterprises, educate the community at large about the creative economy, and inform public policy decision-making about trends and related issues.

In 2011, WSAC and WESTAF supported five pilot project teams to explore how the CVI can inform and advance local efforts to define, support, and advance the creative economy in communities across Washington State. This contract is to facilitate and manage up to nine new project teams in the second year of the pilot project to explore how the CVIndex can inform and advance local efforts to define, support, and advance the creative economy.
