Overcoming Ageism in the Workplace

Like racism or sexism, ageism is discrimination, and it is rooted in prejudice based on age. You can steer clear of ageism by 1) Avoiding seeing coworkers through a lens of their age. Instead focus on their ability, potential, productivity, and impact. 2) Being aware of how older and younger persons are negatively depicted on television. This exercise will help inoculate you and reverse age bias. 3) Considering that by 2020, 67 percent of those who are 65-74 years old will be working. This trend may well include you. 4) Being a “change agent.” Speak up when you witness language or behaviors that perpetuate ageism. 5) Living with awareness so you can make choices—ageism is everywhere and engrained in culture. You will find it in comic strips, bedtime stories, and product advertising, because it has been overlooked and accepted for centuries.

Would You Use a Domestic Violence Shelter?

A domestic violence shelter could save your life if an abusive relationship threatens your well-being, but would you use one? Believing that only homeless or lower-income people take advantage of such services is believing a myth. The CDC’s National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey indicates that 1 in 4 women and 1 in 7 men have been victims of severe physical violence by an intimate partner in their lifetime. People who seek emergency safety at shelters are from all walks of life—including business owners, post-graduates, and even those with PhDs. Domestic violence shelters (find one via your EAP or the Washington State Coalition Against Domestic Violence) are vital resources for protection against abuse. Shelters accept children, and some in Washington State are gender inclusive.

Overhaul Your Morning Routine

Don’t slug through a morning routine that barely gets you out the door. Maximize your routine for improved work-life productivity. The payoff will be a happier you. More excitement about goals, a better mood, improved health, and finding more meaning in your job can all flow from an optimized morning routine. Experiment with a few tweaks, and keep notes about any positive impacts on yourself. Everyone is different, so don’t simply copy an online “do this” formula. Whether it is drinking a glass of water first thing after awakening, avoiding the snooze button, doing 20 pushups, making your bed without fail, or meditation—hundreds of ideas exist. Some will be perfect for you.

Is Loneliness a Health Problem?

Chronic loneliness can have negative health effects, so CIGNA surveyed 20,000 Americans to gauge the prevalence of this emotion. One in five respondents reported no close relationships at all, and one in four reported having no one with whom they can have a meaningful conversation. Those aged 18-22—despite their proficiency with social media—report being most lonely. Relationships are also a critical factor in building resilience and recovering from the impact of trauma. Loneliness is a symptom of a larger problem, because those less lonely reported getting more sleep, spending more time with family, not overworking, and getting proper exercise. If loneliness affects you, take action, engage, or get counseling to overcome it.

In a Relationship with a Problem Gambler?

If you love someone who has a gambling disorder, then you are no stranger to secrecy, lying, reckless borrowing, unpaid bills, and broken promises. It’s time to get help. Start with a professional counselor and step one—support for yourself and the isolation you feel. Next steps: work on change, intervention, and taking actions that can motivate the gambler to enter proper treatment. Loved ones of problem gamblers experience anxiety in the same way that other people do who are in relationships with addicts. Coping fails to help and can make problems worse. Compulsive gambling is a mental disorder, not a willpower failing that resolves itself with a crisis that inspires motivation to quit “this time forever.” Talk to your EAP or a mental health professional for help locating an expert who understands gambling disorders and helping the family. In Washington, free in-patient treatment for gambling addiction is available.

Doing Your Own Team Building

Team building improves communication, increases morale, and boosts productivity. But what if your employer doesn’t offer those big off-site team-building retreats? How can small two-person teams benefit? Try do-it-yourself team building! Simple exercises can rejuvenate you. Find exercises (hundreds are at online bookstores) that 1) focus on building trust; 2) offer the experience of being open with feelings; 3) allow team members to practice nonjudgmental thinking about each other; and 4) give each team member the opportunity to feel vulnerable but have the vulnerability rewarded with safety and acceptance. Team desire to maintain emotional closeness following team building is its own motivation to reduce conflict and practice healthier communication. Refreshing the commitment team members have for one another, even with one team-building exercise, helps walls from forming between members. This dynamic arises from workplace stress—it’s all normal. Understanding the gains from team building will have you doing it more often. Try an exercise: One team member shares a negative experience of their workday with another team member—the more personal the better. One coworker repeats what was shared, but focuses only on the positive aspects of the negative experience. The goal is to identify the positive benefits of negative experiences. Then, switch roles. With this experience, team members learn to reframe negative experiences into positive ones that build resilience, while feeling accepted and supported.
